RESEARCH GOAL

The overriding goal of my research is to improve the understanding of sport consumer behavior and sport organizational behaviors focused particularly on the topic of Social Identification and Relative Deprivation/Gratification. I am interested in identifying key psychological variables that influence sport consumers' identification toward their team. Also, interested in understanding organization members' behaviors through variables including Relative Deprivation, Relative Gratification and Social Identification. These variables are very important in predicting various behavioral aspects of sport consumption and organizational behaviors, such as media and merchandise consumption, event attendance, social mobility, social creation, and social competition. In addition, I am interested in the development and application of various statistical (e.g., structural equation model test) and methodological approaches (e.g., experimental and qualitative studies) to my research interest areas.

RESEARCH INTEREST

- Study of Sport Consumer Behaviors & Motivation
- Study of Effect of Corporate Social Responsibility
- Study of Sport Marketing through Social Media
- Research Design, Measurement, and Statistics
